INTRODUCTION.

THOUGH a large portion of this collection was got together a number of years ago, many pieces selected for their beauty, as much as for their rarity, have been added in recent years.

The hundred and sixty Roman gold coins afford a remarkable series of portraits both of famous Emperors and their wives, as well as of Caesars and Generals, who aspired to the Purple, and who, like Philippus, Valerian II, Postumus, Tacitus, Florianus and Carinus, wore it for a short while only. Into the splendour of Imperial gold is brought that touch of homeliness, which includes portraits of members of the family on the coinage; Vitellius adds the portraits of his two children (17); Severus, those of his whole family, to his own (74); Trajan depicts his sister Marciana; and we know, from their portraits on these coins, the features of Otacilia, Etruscilla, Salonina, Magnia Urbica and Galla Placidia.

No less interesting are many of the reverse types; No. 34 shows Hercules of Gades (Cadiz), with the river Baetis at his feet; on a coin of Vespasian (21) a Roman Triumph is depicted; while on the Aureus of Licinius is the cult statue of Jupiter Capitolinus.

The charm of these "ancient monuments in miniature" reaches its height when we find specimens as fresh as when they left the mint eighteen centuries ago; such as are exemplified here by the coins of Otho, Domitian (24), M. Aurelius (50, 56), Lucius Verus (58, 62), and by many of the aurei of Severus and his two sons, and of Diocletian, his contemporaries and successors.

The Roman uniformity serves as an admirable foil to the Greek diversity and love of freedom, individuality, and art.

Among the Greek series we have four coins (171, 178, 200, 211), signed by the engravers, Aristion, Klendoros, Eumenes, and Heraeleidas. All Western Greeks these, and it is the Western series, of Tarentum and Velia, which call for special notice, in particular such pieces as 163, 170, 179, 184, which are varieties hitherto unpublished.

A coin of Velia with Carthaginian reverse (186) hints at a link between West and East, and we have specimens of the main currency circulating between Italy and Greece, in the Series of Corinth and her colonies. Six pieces of this type (245, 248, 260, 272, 278, 289) are worth special mention. Events in the history of the Greek world are linked with the rare coins of Segesta, Syracuse under Dion (213), Philip Andriscus (232), Cyprian Idalium and Paphos, and African Cyrene. Special attention might also be drawn to a number of gold and electrum pieces ; the remarkable Stater of Philippi, of which only the Berlin specimen seems to be known ; the hecte of Cyzicus ; the Graeco-Indian pieces ; the Stater of Ptolemy I ; and the rare little coins of Bruttii, Tauromenium and Carthage.

Not a few of these coins come from such well-known cabinets as those of the Montagu, Hoffmann, Bunbury and Benson Collections, and in the last named are also to be found parallels to some of the coins here represented. Notably, among these may be mentioned Tarentum (169), Thurium (175), Croton (189), Terina (192), Syracuse (209) and Chalcidice (224), which compare favourably with their counterparts figuring in the Benson Sale Catalogue, Plates I, II, III, IV, X, and XIV.
